Access Arrangements: A Guide to Using a Reader

www.malmesbury.wilts.sch.uk

The candidate can:

- Ask the reader to read whole or part questions
- Ask them to read back their own work
- Ask them to read questions more than once

Teacher evidence and testing in Learning Support will indicate if a student needs a reader.

Good Practice:

Ask the reader to read everything

Why?

- There may be a word that you think you know but are not 100% sure of
- Some questions can be very lengthy and having a confident person read it can help with your understanding of what is being asked

Action!

- Whilst the reader reads you can be underlining/highlighting any key words within the question.
- You can only use the highlighter on the exam questions/paper.

Exceptions:

- In any exam, the reader cannot explain the meaning of words or what the question is asking
- For the English Language exam a reader cannot read any of the question paper to you as this is what is being tested
 - However - the reader can read back anything that the candidate has written
 - Plus extra time will be given to compensate.

More Exceptions:

- In math's exams the reader cannot read the symbols
- Sometimes the digits or the words cannot be read - for example the question may read write 3541 in words or write Two hundred and forty one in digits either way to read them would give the answer away so they cannot be read

Questions:

The two main questions that we get asked are:

- Will I be the only candidate in the room?

Probably not. But it does not matter how many candidates there are in the room you are still entitled to have everything read to you. You must decide what you want someone to read

Questions:

- Why should I use a reader when I usually manage to read for myself?

Remember there is limited time in exams, time could be lost due to reading speed. Time where they could be writing an answer

If the question is a complex one then it is very easy to make a mistake and misunderstand the question, this can be less likely to happen when using a reader

We can misread word endings when under stress and they can affect your correct response. To misread developing for developed would end up with a very different answer

Finally:

Don't be afraid to ask for a reader if you are entitled to one.

There are many reasons for using a reader and be assured there are people in positions of power, entrepreneurs, famous musicians and actors who will have used readers for their exams
